

THE LAST
CIVILISATION?
THE LIVING PAST IN SOUTH INDIA

An illustrated lecture by
Michael Wood

Tuesday 3rd June 2010
The Royal Geographical Society, London

Michael Wood

In this lavishly illustrated lecture—which is also accompanied by a DVD clip—writer and presenter of many critically acclaimed series on television, Michael Wood takes us on a journey of discovery through the tropical landscapes of India's deep south, describing the Tamil world as the last classical civilisation to survive in the modern world.

Bazaar

Jeevika Trust's exclusive Bazaar, organised by trustee Serena Fass, includes a range of boutiques, artists, travel companies and restaurants covering a range of luxury Indian items. All of our stall holders are personally selected for their quality items, hand picked from India and will generously donate 10% of all of their takings from this event.

Jeevika^{trust}
village livelihood in India

Supporting the work of Jeevika Trust

Jeevika Trust has worked in rural India for the past 40 years. We support people on the margins of rural society—low-caste and tribal people, with a special focus on women. We help them to keep village life viable in the face of today's huge challenges—globalisation, climate change, HIV/AIDS and the migration of young people to the cities. Our projects focus on water & sanitation, nutrition & health, income opportunities & microfinance for women. They help to build and sustain community, family and individual livelihoods. For full details of these, and how you can support our work, please visit our website:

Jeevika Trust is UK registered charity no. 291167
